Welcome to the Spring 2017 Concert of the San Francisco Lyric Chorus! We present music of two master composers from Central Europe—Antonín Dvořák and Zoltán Kodály. Dvořák shares the beauty of Czech folk music sounds and motifs in two joyous works. Kodály created a spiritual work that expresses strength and resilience in a time of horror.

Since its formation in 1995, the Chorus has offered diverse and innovative music to the community through a gathering of singers who believe in a commonality of spirit and sharing. The début concert featured music by Gabriel Fauré and Louis Vierne. The Chorus has been involved in several premieres, including Bay Area composer Brad Osness’ Lamentations, Ohio composer Robert Witt’s Four Motets to the Blessed Virgin Mary (West Coast premiere), New York composer William Hawley’s The Snow That Never Drifts (San Francisco premiere), San Francisco composer Kirke Mechem’s Christmas the Morn, Blessed Are They, To Music (San Francisco premieres), and selections from his operas, John Brown and The Newport Rivals, our 10th Anniversary Commission work, the World Premiere of Illinois composer Lee R. Kesselman’s This Grand Show Is Eternal, Robert Train Adams’ It Will Be Summer—Eventually and Music Expresses (West Coast premieres), as well as the Fall 2009 World Premiere of Dr. Adams’ Christmas Fantasy. We are especially proud of our Summer 2015 performance of classical choral music performed at the 1915 Panama Pacific International Exposition, including the first American performance of Camille Saint-Saëns’ oratorio, The Promised Land, since its American premiere and only American performance, which was given at the PPIE.

Antonín Dvořák (1841-1904)

Born in Nelahozeves, Bohemia in 1841, Antonín Dvořák is considered one of the greatest 19th century Czech composers. Bohemia, a central European area now part of the Czech Republic, is bounded by Germany, Poland, the Czech province of Moravia, and Austria. The area, with its natural beauty and storied history and literature, has inspired the creativity of many artists.

Son of a butcher and innkeeper who also played the zither professionally, Dvořák received his first musical education in 1847, when he attended the local school and took singing and violin lessons. The youth was so talented he played at the local church and in the village band, great resources for learning traditional ceremonial and sacred music, as well as local folk dances and songs. When he was 12, his parents sent him to school in a nearby town, where he learned German, as well as violin, piano, organ, continuo playing and music theory. In 1856, he was sent to the German school in a more distant town, where he learned organ and music theory. In 1857, he began musical studies at the Prague Organ School, learning continuo, harmony, modulation, chorale playing, improvisation, counterpoint and fugue, completing his studies in 1859. He studied regular academic subjects at a local school. At this time, he also participated as a violinist in the concerts of Prague’s Cecilia Society, where he played the works of major Romantic composers, including Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann and Wagner. Since he lived in Prague, he had the opportunity to attend many concerts, where he heard performances of the works of both traditional and contemporary composers.

Between 1859 and 1871, Dvořák made his living as a professional musician in Prague, joining a local dance band as a viola player. The band played in local restaurants and for local dances, as well as becoming the nucleus of the local theatre orchestra. The Provisional Theatre Orchestra played for operas and stage plays, and Dvořák was exposed to the works of such Italian opera composers as Verdi, Bellini and Donizetti, as well as later playing operas by Czech and Slavic composers. The theatre orchestra presented its own concerts, and Dvořák was a musician in three different concerts conducted by Richard Wagner. He also taught piano, giving lessons to his future wife, Anna, among other pupils. At the same time, he began composing, including string quartets and quintets, symphonies, a cello concerto, a song cycle, and an opera. By 1871-1872, his compositions were beginning to be performed in Prague. His first published work, a song entitled The Lark, appeared in 1873. The Prague musical establishment first noticed him in March 1873, after the successful performance of his cantata for male voices, Hymnus: the Heirs of the White Mountains. He also composed an opera in Wagnerian style, King and Charcoal Burner. Bedrich Smetana, conductor of the Provisional Theatre Orchestra, began rehearsals of this opera, but had to remove it from the Orchestra’s program in Fall 1873 due to its difficulty. This caused Dvořák to destroy many of the works he had composed between 1866 and 1871, and begin composing instrumental music in a new style, incorporating Slavonic folklore and music. He created a new version of King and Charcoal Burner, totally different from the first, and it had a successful premiere in Fall 1874. During this same year, he was appointed organist at the Church of St. Vojtech, a position he held until 1877.

In 1874, Dvořák received an artist’s stipend granted by the Austrian government, the first of four such awards between 1874 and 1878. Johannes Brahms was a member of the reviewing board and was deeply impressed by Dvořák’s abilities, commenting “…for several years I have enjoyed the works sent in by Antonín Dvořák of Prague…. Dvořák has written all manner of things: operas (Czech), symphonies, quartets, piano pieces. In any case, he is a very talented man…” Brahms wrote to his Berlin publisher, Simrock, encouraging the publisher to consider Dvořák’s work. Brahms became a close friend, and his support helped to open the door for Dvořák in terms of publication and performance. By the end of 1878, Dvořák’s works were being played internationally.

Successful abroad, Dvořák also became more successful at home. He conducted concerts of his own works and was the composer in Bohemia most often chosen to create works for special occasions, such as activities of local royalty. Because of Czech political tensions with the Austrian government, he began to broaden his compositional style from being recognizably Slavic, since performance of identifiable Czech music was frowned upon in Vienna, a European music center. A composer much admired in England, Dvořák was invited in March 1884 by the Philharmonic Society to conduct his popular Stabat Mater in London’s Albert Hall. The concert was a resounding success, and Dvořák was the toast of the London musical world, conducting other concerts in England during that month. Over the next ten years, English conducting and compositional offers followed. He premiered his Seventh Symphony in April 1885, his cantata, The Spectre’s Bride, in August 1885, his oratorio, St. Ludmilla, in October 1886, his Eighth Symphony in 1890, his Requiem in 1891, and his Cello Concerto in 1896. In 1891, he received an honorary doctorate from Cambridge University. The English audiences and musical experts appreciated his talent, and he continued to use Czech and Slavic themes in his English music commissions, rather than having to tailor his music to the petty political attitudes of the continent. He also met the owners of the Novello music publishing company, who offered him a better deal than the German publisher, Simrock.

Because of his financial success in England, Dvořák was able to buy a country home in Vysoka, a small Bohemian village. He and his family spent summers there, and he enjoyed composing in the beauty and quiet of the countryside. His international success brought him many honors and awards, including an honorary doctorate from the Czech University of Prague and election to the Czech Academy of Sciences and Arts. In 1888, he went on a concert tour to Russia, invited by Tchaikovsky, whom he had met in Prague a number of times.
In January 1891, Dvořák became a Professor of Composition and Instrumentation at the Prague Conservatory. He was a demanding teacher who wanted his students to think for themselves, requiring originality and mastery of compositional skills, as well as critical assessment of their own work. His Prague students included Rubin Goldmark (teacher of Aaron Copland and George Gershwin), American composer and librettist William Arms Fisher, and Harry Rowe Shelley (teacher of Charles Ives).

Later that year, Dvořák was invited to the United States by Jeannette Thurber, President of the National Conservatory of Music in America, a New York institution. Mrs. Thurber was very interested in creating an American national style of music, and she was aware of Dvořák’s international acclaim in that area. She offered him the position of Artistic Director and Professor of Composition of the Conservatory at a salary 25 times what he was being paid in Prague. Dvořák accepted, and arrived to begin his new position on October 1, 1892. Mrs. Thurber commissioned Dvořák to write his Te Deum as a celebratory composition for the 400th anniversary of Columbus’ voyage to America. He made his first American appearance conducting the premiere of that work in Carnegie Hall, October 21, 1892. He wrote to a friend, “The Americans expect great things of me. I am to show them the way into the Promised Land, the realm of a new independent art, in short, a national style of music…” Soon after his arrival, Dvořák began his search for an American national style. In researching African-American music, he sought the help of Henry Thacker Burleigh, an African-American student at the Conservatory. Burleigh often sang spirituals and Southern plantation songs for him at his home. Dvořák commented, in a statement quite controversial at the time, “I am convinced that the future music of this country must be founded on what are called Negro melodies. These can be the foundation of a serious and original school of composition, to be developed in the United States. These beautiful and varied themes are the product of the soil. They are the folk songs of America and your composers must turn to them. Only in this way can a musician express the true sentiments of a people… In the Negro melodies of America, I discover all that is needed for a great and noble school of music. They are pathetic, tender, passionate, melancholy, gay, gracious or what you will… There is nothing in the whole range of composition that cannot find a thematic source there.”

Dvořák also researched and studied Amerindian music and themes, and explained his musical views in many newspaper articles and interviews. He felt that a national style could be crafted from certain patterns in “native” American music, and in fact, used such patterns and devices in some of the most well-known works composed during his American stay (1892-1895), including the New World Symphony, the String Quartet in F, the String Quintet in E flat, and the Biblical Songs. Probably his most popular work, the New World Symphony had its premiere in New York in 1893. After the 1892-1893 academic year, Mrs. Thurber wanted Dvořák to continue with the Conservatory for two more years. Dvořák agreed. Unfortunately, the U.S. financial crisis of 1893 almost drove Jeannette Thurber’s husband (a wealthy New York merchant and major underwriter of the Conservatory) to bankruptcy, and she could no longer afford to pay Dvořák. He returned to the United States in Fall 1894, but, homesick and wanting to compose instead of teach, he returned to Bohemia in April 1895. He spent his final years composing a variety of major works, including his Cello Concerto, various symphonic poems, chamber music, and operas, including his most famous opera, Rusalka, which premiered in Prague in 1901. His fame had spread, and he received various awards and was appointed to many different commissions and organizational boards. In 1901, he was appointed Director of the Prague Conservatory. He died in May, 1904.

Dvořák was one of the shining stars of the late Romantic/early Modern period, exhibiting all of the passion, emotion, and variety of late 19th/early 20th century composition. He had a wonderful sense of melody and line, and at times drew upon the music of native cultures to inspire his compositions, a common technique of the Romantic period in literature, music, and the other arts. Critics commented that he would incorporate native melodies into his works, especially in his American compositions, such as the New World Symphony, but he said, “...about my having made use of ‘Indian’ and ‘American’ themes…that is a lie. I tried to write only in the spirit of those American melodies.” Alone among his contemporaries, Dvořák wrote in almost all the musical genres available at the time: opera, choral music, including masses, oratorios, cantatas, songs, orchestral music, including symphonies and overtures, chamber music, including quartets, quintets, and other instrumental combinations, music for keyboard, and concertos for various instruments. He brought passion, expression, and emotion to his compositions, infused them with the energy of his native land and the native music of others, and contributed music of lasting melody and depth.

Leos Janáček (1854-1928)

Born in 1854 in Hukvaldy, a town in the Moravian region of the Czech Republic, composer/ teacher/conductor/folklorist/publicist/writer and music theorist Leos Janáček was the son and grandson of teachers and musicians. Choral singing was part of his family tradition, and young Leos demonstrated his musical gifts at an early age. He was one of 14 children born into a relatively poor family. With many mouths to feed and a crowded house, his parents could not afford to give him the education he deserved.

When Janáček was eleven, his family sent him to be a boy chorister at the Augustinian Monastery in Brno. Pavel Krizkovsky, the choir master and Moravia’s major composer at the time, took an interested in the musical education of the talented boy. Janáček learned harmony and counterpoint from this master. As a member of the Monastery choir, the youngster became acquainted with the long tradition of church music, especially the Slavic choral tradition.

Leos Janáček’s family destined him to become a teacher, following in the footsteps of his father and grandfather. He spent one year studying at the Monastery, and three more attending Brno’s German College, where he studied education, graduating in 1869. He then received a full scholarship to the Czech Teacher’s Institute in Brno, where he majored in music, geography, and history. Graduating in 1872, he spent the next two years as an unpaid probationary teacher at the Institute’s teacher demonstration school.

In 1872, Pavel Krizkovsky became the Director of Music at St. Wenceslas Cathedral... in Olomouc, and he asked that Janáček replace him as choirmaster of the Monastery choir. Over the next two years, Janáček reformed and revised the music program at the Monastery, adding liturgical works of major composers of all periods, from Palestrina to Haydn, as well as music by contemporary Czech and German composers. His achievements brought him to the attention of local leaders, and in 1873, he was asked to become the director of Svatopluk, Brno’s workingman’s choral society. The group was used to singing folk songs and drinking songs, but Janáček expanded the repertoire and transformed the group into a more formal, classical choral group that performed in the local concert hall. He composed his first choral works—four-part folk songs—for this group.

In the autumn of 1874, after two years of unpaid probationary teaching, Janáček was able to obtain a year’s leave to study with Frantisek Skuhersky at the Prague Organ School. The Organ School’s curriculum was a three-year program. Janáček had no money. By working diligently and devoting all of his time to his studies, he managed to finish two years worth of work in one year. He composed a few organ compositions during this time, as well as musical exercises for students. Because of his poverty, he could not even rent a piano or attend the many fine cultural events Prague offered.

Janáček returned to Brno in the fall of 1875, resuming his previous assignments of conducting the Monastery choir and Svatopluk. In 1877, he resigned from Svatopluk and became conductor of a middle class men’s chorus, the Beseda Choral Society. Within a few months, he had transformed Beseda into a mixed chorus, drawing on singers from the Monastery choir, as well as students from the Czech Teacher’s Institute. With a chorus that at times numbered 250 singers, he was able to perform large choral works, such as the Mozart Requiem and the Beethoven Missa Solemnis. In 1877, he published his first composition, Exaudi Deus.

Janáček met and became friends with Antonín Dvorák. The two men went on a walking tour of Bohemia in 1877, and Janáček introduced Dvorák’s original Moravian Choruses to Brno’s audiences. Janáček continued his musical studies when possible. In June and July 1877, he was able to study additional music theory at the Prague Organ School. Between October 1879 and March 1880, he took paid leave to study with Oscar Paul, Professor of Harmony, and Leo Grill, Professor of Composition, at the Leipzig Conservatory. Still existing on bare minimum funding, he was unable to partake of Leipzig’s cultural life, as he had been unable to enjoy that of Prague. He continued to compose during this time. Between April and June 1880, he studied harmony, counterpoint, and composition with Franz Krenn at the Vienna Conservatory.

In July 1881, Janáček married his 16-year old piano student, Zdenka Schulzová, daughter of the Czech Teacher’s Institute director. They had a turbulent relationship and two children, a son who died when he was two, and a daughter who died at age 23. In December 1881, he was appointed director of the newly-established Brno Organ School, an institution he had wanted for years to create. He enlarged the Organ School’s program to including programs for singing, violin, and piano, as well as establishing an orchestra. The Organ School later became the Brno Conservatory, with Janáček as its director between 1881 and 1919.

In addition, Janáček continued as director of the Beseda Choral Society, introducing works by Dvorák, as well as music by contemporary European composers, including Tchaikovsky, Liszt, Smetana, and Saint-Saëns. From 1886 to 1902, he also taught music at the Brno Gymnasium, a secondary school. In 1884, he founded a journal that reviewed the performances of the Provisional Czech Theatre of Brno, editing the publication until 1886.

In 1887, Janáček began work on his first opera, Sárka. In 1890, he resigned as conductor of the Beseda Choral Society. Between 1886 and 1890, he collaborated with Frantisek Bartos, a colleague from the Brno Gymnasium, on editions of Moravian folk songs. The first edition, published in 1890, contained 174 songs. The second, published between 1899 and 1901, contained 2057 songs and dances. During this period, he began an extensive study of Moravian folk music. He also composed orchestral dances and dance suites in folk style.

At the beginning of the 20th century, Janáček concentrated on composing choral music for the church, including his 1901 Our Father and his 1904 Ave Maria. In 1901, he published his piano work, On An Overgrown Path, one of his more popular compositions at the time. In 1891, he composed a one-act opera, The Beginning of a Romance, based on a story by Gabriela Preissová. Although it was favorably received, Janáček withdrew it from circulation. He realized that the story—about jealousy and murder—had possibilities as a larger composition, and he reworked it into his 1904 opera, Jenufa. In 1904, he resigned from the Czech Teacher’s Institute in order to concentrate on composing and directing the Organ School.

Between 1903 and 1907, Janáček composed his next opera, Osud (Fate), although it was not performed during his lifetime. In 1908, he began another opera, The Excursion of Mr. Broucek to the Moon, but abandoned it in 1913, finally completing it in 1917. During this time, he also composed a number of choral, chamber, and orchestral works.

In 1917, Janáček began what was to be the most important creative period in his life. Although still married, but in a strained relationship with his wife, he fell in love with the wife of an acquaintance. This passion inspired a torrent of new and substantial works, especially operas. He composed Katya Kabanova (1921), The Cunning Little Vixen (1924), The Makropoulos Affair (1926), and From the House of the Dead (1927). In addition, he composed several orchestral works, including Taras Bulba (1918) and Sinfonietta (1926). He composed his major choral work, the Glagolitic Mass (1926), as well as his popular String Quartet, No. 1, The Kreutzer Sonata (1923) and String Quartet, No. 2, Intimate Letters (1928). He resigned as Director of the Brno Conservatory in 1919, but continued to teach there until 1925. He devoted the rest of his life to composing and died in 1928.

Along with his countrymen Bedrich Smetana and Antonín Dvorák, Leos Janáček is considered one of the most important Czech composers. In addition, he was beloved for his abilities as a teacher, a conductor, a champion of Moravian and Czech folk music, and as a supporter of contemporary music. He also was an important writer on music theory.
Six Moravian Songs

In 1873, Antonín Dvořák began working as a music teacher for Jan Neff, a wealthy Czech businessman, and his family. Neff, his wife, and his children's governess often participated in singing evenings at home, with Dvořák playing the piano. Neff asked Dvořák to arrange some Moravian folk songs into duets for these occasions. Dvořák found a wealth of texts and tunes in František Susil's (1804-1868) collection, Moravian National Songs, a selection of folk songs. In 1875, Dvořák composed his initial set—three duets for soprano and tenor, with piano accompaniment (Opus 20). In May 1876, Dvořák composed his second set of five songs, Duets for Two Sopranos, with piano accompaniment (Opus 29), and between June 26 and July 13, 1876 composed a third set of nine duets for soprano and contralto, with piano accompaniment (Opus 32). Between September and October 1877, he wrote four more duets (Opus 38). In 1881, Dvořák composed one more duet to complete the collection.

Jan Neff was so delighted with the compositions that he had the songs from Opus 29 and Opus 32 published, and gave the publication to Dvořák as a Christmas present in 1876. Dvořák sent a copy of this edition to the Austrian artist's grant reviewing committee, along with an application for a grant. Johannes Brahms was a member of the committee, and Dvořák enclosed a letter to him, asking Brahms to show the duets to Fritz Simrock, Brahms' publisher. Brahms usually was quite cynical about such requests, but something about Dvořák's letter, as well as the quality of the music, touched him. He asked Simrock to look at the music, commenting, "You will find pleasure in them as I did, and, as a publisher you will be specially delighted with their piquancy. Dvořák is undoubtedly a very talented man—and poor besides. I beg you think it over". Simrock did, and published the duets in 1878. The Moravian Songs were an immediate success, launching Dvořák's international career. Simrock paid Dvořák absolutely nothing for this collection, even reprinting them in 1880. Because they were such a success, Simrock asked Dvořák to compose something else—something folk song or folk dance-like. Dvořák composed his Slavonic Dances as a result, solidifying his international reputation.

Dvořák and Janáček met in 1877, and went on their summer walking tour of Bohemia. Dvořák showed Janáček the Moravian Songs, and Janáček arranged four selections from Opus 32 for mixed chorus. He kept Dvořák's original piano accompaniment. He arranged two more selections in 1884, conducting his arrangement in Brno. His support helped to popularize Dvořák's music among the Czech public.

In 1939, Josef Plavec published Janáček's choral arrangement of the Moravian Songs, which he found in a Brno museum. He located the piano part, the original Czech text, and the German translation by Kurt Honolka in a critical edition of Dvořák's work. We sing an English translation in today's concert.

1. An My Scythe Were Whetted Sharp And Keen…
An my scythe were whetted sharp and keen,
with the corn and autumn grain,
I would mow the flow'rs that grow between them;
they for life should plead in vain.
Fair, blue-eyed flow'rets, where should I mourn you?
False, blue-eyed maiden, wherefore should I scorn you?
With thy love o'erladen, with these flow'rs fast fading
I would fain adorn you for your new elected swain!

2. Small Our Hamlet…
Small our hamlet by the riverside, love,
I may never, never be thy bride, love;
For thy mother, oh, thy mother shows her discontent,
She will never to our union give her free consent.
What care we, whate'er our mothers say, love,
though a thousand times they say us nay, love,
though a thousand times they say us nay, love,
we will never heed them nor obey, love.
Thou art all my heart's delight, love,
an thou to me stand;
and when bidding me “Good Night”, love,
giv'st thy tiny hand.
Thou, my soul, my heart's delight, love,
Wilt to me stand,
and when bidding me “Good Night”, love,
give thy tiny hand,
and when bidding me “Good Night”, love,
give me thy dear hand.

3. The Forsaken Lassie
Down from her nest a wild dove flew towards a field where the ripe corn grew,
filled her crop (throat pouch), then sought her nest,
high in the willow, there to rest.
There sits and weeps a maid so fair.
Hot tears trill thro' her gold silken hair;
sits and broiders a wreath and two rings,
"Forsaken am I!" she softly sings.
Broiders a rose, and makes sweet moan;
“How could he leave me to die alone!”
sits there and broiders a wreath and two rings…
“I am forsaken!” she softly sings.
When again it puts forth green, then, love, shall be our wedding!

Ev'ry day the sun doth shine, I'm on the watch with eyes keen…

Oh, confound that wretched pine! Not one tip it shows of green.

Yesterday, the birds gan sing, early in the morning.

I awoke to see young Spring hill and dale adorning.

Then the thought: 'Now art thou mine!' set my heart a-glowing, for upon our poor old pine fresh green tips were showing.

Te Deum

Fall 1892 was the season of the Columbian Fourth Centennial, celebrating the 400th anniversary of Columbus' voyage to America. Jeannette Thurber commissioned Dvořák to compose and conduct a cantata for the occasion. She asked her friend, Alfred H. Littleton, head of the London music publishing firm, Novello, Ewer and Company, to convey the information to Dvořák. She requested a work no longer than 30 minutes, and commented that she was searching for a suitable text that she would send as soon as she found something. John Clapham notes that her instructions to Dvořák say, "Should Mrs. Thurber not succeed in getting suitable words in time, the proposition is that Dr. Dvořák choose some Latin Hymn such as 'Te Deum laudamus' or 'Jubilate Deo' or any other which would be suitable for the occasion."

As Dvořák did not receive a specific text from Mrs. Thurber immediately, he chose the Te Deum and began work on June 25, 1892. In late July, Mrs. Thurber sent him the text of Joseph Rodman Drake's patriotic poem, The American Flag, but he already had completed the Te Deum and was orchestrating it. (He later set The American Flag as a cantata.)

Dvořák's Te Deum received its premiere in Carnegie Hall on October 21, 1892, after the October 12 date of the Columbian festival. The work is composed in the sonata form—four distinct movements.

The first movement is divided into three sections. It begins with a joyous folk-like instrumental celebration and choral statement of the text. Dvořák combines chant-style phrases with folk-inspired melodies throughout the section. The soprano soloist provides a calm interlude singing Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus and lists of all those who praise God. She is accompanied by choral commentary from the tenors and basses. After she mentions the Holy Trinity (Venerandum verum et unicum Filium; Sanctum quoque Paraclitum Spiritum), the chorus returns with the original Te Deum text and theme.

The second movement, Tu Rex gloriae Christe, is a stirring and dramatic bass solo, accompanied by choral commentary. The third movement, Aeterna fac, is an intense and fervent scherzo for chorus and instruments—quick and energetic in ¾ time. Calm returns in the fourth movement with the soprano soloist's lyrical singing of Dignare Domine. Underneath, the chorus accompanies her with a plea for mercy, Miserere nostri, Domine. Soprano and bass soloists sing together in Dvořák's passionate addition of the text from the Doxology to complete this work—a text not part of the Te Deum:

Benedicamus Patrem et Filium cum Sancto Spiritu.
Alleluja!
Laudamus et superexaltemus eum in saecula.
Alleluja!

Blessed be the Father and the Son with the Holy Spirit,
Alleluia!
Praise and glory forever.
Alleluia!

The chorus joins this final paean with ecstatic alleluias. The Te Deum ends with the instrumental expression of its joyous folk-rhythm beginning.

Latin Text:

Te Deum laudamus,
Te Dominum confitemur,
Te aeternum Patrem omnis terra veneratur.

Tibi omnes Angeli,
Tibi coeli et universae Potestates,
Tibi cherubim et seraphim incessabili voce proclamant:
Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth.

Pleni sunt coeli et terra majestatis gloriae tuae.

Te gloriósus Apostolorum chorus,
Te Prophetarum laudabilis numerus,
Te Martyrum candidatus laudat exercitus.

Te per orbem terrarum sancta confitetur Ecclesia:
Patrem immensae majestatis,
Venerandum tuum verum et unicum Filium,
Sanctum quoque Paraclitum Spiritum.

Tu Rex gloriae, Christe.
Tu Patris sempiternus es Filius.
Tu ad liberandum susceptrus hominem non horruisti Virginis uterum.

Tu, devicto mortis aculeo, aperuiisti credentibus regna coelorum.

Tu ad dexteram Dei sedes in gloria Patris.
Judex crederis esse venturus.

Te ergo quaesumus tuis famulis subveni, quos pretioso Sanguine redemisti.
Aeterna fac cum Sanctis tuis in gloria numerari.

Salvum fac populum tuum, Domine, et benedic haereditate tuae.

Et rege eos, et extolle illos in aeternum.

English Translation:

We praise thee, O God:
We acknowledge thee to be the Lord.
All the earth doth worship thee:
The Father everlasting.
To thee all angels cry aloud:
The Heavens, and all the powers therein.
To thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually do cry, Holy, Holy, Holy.

Lord God of Sabaoth; Heaven and earth are full of the Majesty of thy glory.

The glorious company of the Apostles praise thee.
The goodly fellowship of the Prophets praise thee.
The noble army of Martyrs praise thee.
The holy Church throughout all the world doth acknowledge thee;
The Father of an infinite Majesty; thine honorable, true, and only Son;
Also the Holy Ghost: the Comforter.

Thou art the King of Glory: O Christ.
Thou art the everlasting Son of the Father.
When thou took'st upon thee to deliver man:
Thou didst not abhor the Virgin's womb.
When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death:
Thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers.
Thou sittest at the right hand of God:
In the Glory of the Father.
We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge.
We therefore pray thee, help thy servants:
Whom thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood.
Make them to be numbered with thy Saints:
In glory everlasting.

O Lord, save Thy people:
And bless thine heritage.
Govern them:
And lift them up forever.
Day by day we magnify thee;
One of the major 20th century Hungarian composers and an equally important the Hungarian spirit, I would answer: Kodály. “If I were to name the composer whose works are the most perfect embodiment of Hungarian folk music. In 1906, they published a work on Hungarian folksongs and began a lifelong friendship. Malcolm MacDonald says, “Kodály was a highly cultured man who spoke seven languages including Latin and Greek. He had an enormous library, and an even greater memory… I know he was a very deeply religious man…”

Kodály never lost his interest in Hungarian folk music and beginning in 1905, began to collect local folk songs, going on expeditions to different Hungarian towns. He demonstrated a long-lasting interest in and love for the music of his native country. In 1905, he met Béla Bartók, another major Hungarian composer, also interested in Hungarian folk music. In 1906, they published a work on Hungarian folksongs and began a lifelong friendship. Malcolm MacDonald says, “Kodály in Hungary occupied a position like that of Vaughan Williams in the UK: as the great national composer who, by his discovery and creative use of his folk music heritage, his role in society as an educator and fulfiller of cultural needs, forged the standard by which 20th-century Hungarian music should be judged.” Vaughan Williams and Holst in the UK; Kodály and Bartók in Hungary; Dvorák and Janáček in the Czech Republic.

Kodály spent the first six months of 1907 studying in Berlin and Paris, where he encountered the music of Debussy. Upon his return to Budapest, he was appointed a Professor of Music Theory at the Academy of Music and in 1908, began teaching composition. He soon was teaching harmony, counterpoint, form and orchestration, score-reading, vocal polyphony and musical literacy. His students included Antol Dorati, Eugene Ormandy, Matyas Seiber, and Lajos Bárdos. In 1910, he had his first compositions performed in Budapest, followed closely by performances in Paris and Zürich, Switzerland.

Bartók and Kodály continued collecting folksongs until World War I halted that activity. Between 1917 and 1919, Kodály worked as a music critic, wrote articles, taught, and composed. After World War I, Hungary had a short-lived Socialist republic, during which Kodály became Deputy Director of the Academy of Music. Upon the demise of that government in 1919, Kodály was brought to trial 12 times on various charges, including being unpatriotic. The public was turned against him and his music. He was not allowed to teach at the Academy, and he stopped composing during 1921-1922. His promising international career was halted temporarily as a result of the worldwide chaotic aftermath of World War I, as well as his problems within Hungary. In 1921, Universal Editions, a publisher, began to publish his music internationally, and once again the world began to take notice. He returned to public acclaim in November 1923 with the premiere of the Psalmus Hungaricus, his setting of Psalm 55, written for the 50th anniversary of the City of Budapest. This work received international attention, as well as his next composition, the musical play Háry János (1926) and the orchestral suite derived from it.

In 1927, Kodály began an expansion of his musical career, making his début as a conductor of his own work. He went on to become a respected and successful conductor. For the rest of his life, he continued composing, scholarly writing, and exploring Hungary’s rich folk music heritage. He arranged many folk songs for solo voice/keyboard and for chorus, and arranged folk dances for orchestra, such as his popular Dances of Galánta and Dances of Marosszék. In 1936, he wrote another of his well-received choral works, the Budavári Te Deum, and in 1939, The Peacock Variations, his orchestral masterpiece. He continued to compose during World War II, finishing his beautiful Missa Brevis in the cellar of a Budapest convent where he and his wife had taken refuge. A political liberal, he and his wife were active during the war in saving people from persecution. In 1946 and 1947, he made a concert tour to the United Kingdom, the United States, and the Soviet Union, conducting his own and other works. After World War II, he worked with many different organizations, including being elected as a deputy in the Hungarian National Assembly and becoming Chair of the Academy of Music Board of Directors. He received numerous awards and several honorary doctorates, including one from Oxford University. He often lectured in Hungary and abroad on various ethnomusicology subjects. His final major compositions, the Hymn of Zrinyi for baritone and chorus (1954), Symphony No. 1 (1961), Mohács for chorus (1965) and Laudes Organi (1966) demonstrate his continuing creative ability. He died in 1967.

In addition to his work as a musician and scholar, Zoltán Kodály was an educator and strong supporter of music education for children. The ‘Kodály Method,’ a worldwide popular form of music education, was inspired by and named for him, although he did not create the system. Developed in Hungary during the 1940s and 1950s, the method states that anyone who can understand language can understand music, and singing is the best way to study music. Music education should begin early, and folk songs from one’s own linguistic heritage are the best vehicle for music education. Only music of the highest quality should be used for teaching. Music education is not an extra or frill; it is a core component of education.

Kodály composed in various genres, including works for the stage and for orchestra, chamber music, and music for solo instruments, but he was first and foremost a composer of choral music. He composed music for chorus and orchestra, chorus and individual instruments, a cappella music, music for treble voices, music for male choirs, music for children’s choruses, and music for solo voice. He made lasting contributions to modern Hungarian music, to ethnomusicology, to music education and to music scholarship.

Conductor Arpad Joó commented, “I think it is safe to say that the greatest master of choral writing in this [20th] century was Kodály… Kodály was fascinated by the human voice, not just how it sounds alone but in a chorus, and how children sound together, and how children and adults sound together. To be mystical about it I think Kodály is the twentieth century reincarnation of Palestrina. In Palestrina we hear the same deep religiosity combined with a unique knowledge of the human voice and choral writing. This is exactly what Kodály brings to these works. The choral writing styles of Palestrina and Kodály are also strikingly similar.”

Missa Brevis

Zoltán Kodály and his wife were political liberals, and Kodály suffered consequences over the years from his challenging of government. The Kodálys were active during World War II in saving people in peril. Malcolm MacDonald comments, “During the War Kodály’s life was often in danger as he helped save people from persecution (he had been among the first to protest at the racist laws of the Horthy government).” Because of that danger, the Kodálys finally had to take refuge themselves in the cellar of a Budapest Sisters of Mercy convent. But, the war did not stop Kodály from composing.

Kodály originally composed this Mass in 1942-1943 as an organ work, which is why the Introit is an organ introduction. In 1944, in the basement of that convent, he began revising the Mass as a work for chorus and organ, adding the traditional Mass texts, with one additional text. In February 1945, the choral version of the Missa Brevis was given its premiere in a coatroom of the Budapest Opera House, with a chorus made up of soloists from the Budapest Opera Company, accompanied by a harmonium (a type of pump organ). Budapest was under siege at the time, so the sounds of gunfire were heard in the distance. One audience member said that the Allied bombs sounded like timpani.

Laszlo Eösze, in commenting about the Missa Brevis, notes that Kodály “sums up, in his own idiom, the whole tradition of European sacred music, from Gregorian Chant through Palestrina and Bach to the great romantics of the Nineteenth Century.”

The Missa Brevis contains the standard six Mass sections: Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei. The organ Introit is left from Kodály’s first version of the Mass. Kodály added an additional section, the Ite, Missa Est. The Mass itself is in the shape of an arch, beginning with the Kyrie and ending with the Agnus Dei.

Kyrie. This movement is divided into three sections. Section 1, Kyrie, is a simple chant-like phrase sung by the altos, tenors, and basses. Section 2, Christe eleison, pays homage to the Renaissance-style antiphonal chorus of Palestrina, with a treble trio singing the Christe, echoed by the three lower voices. Section 3, the second Kyrie, begins with the basses singing the chant, followed by the altos. The sopranos and tenors sing sustained notes, and the tenors sing the last repetition of the chant.

Gloria. This movement is divided into five sections. The tenor soloist intones the chant beginning Section 1, followed by the tenors, altos, and basses responding with the rest of the phrase, as the sopranos sing Pax! Altos, tenors, and basses sing Laudamus te in unison as the sopranos join in with a melismatic version of the phrase. Sopranos/altos sing the Benedictus te in dialogue with the tenors/basses. All come together on Adoramus te. Section 2, Glorificamus te is a dialogue between tenors/basses and soprano/altos. All come together on omnipotens. A second dialogue begins on Domine Fili unigenite, with sopranos/tenors alternating with altos/basses. All come together at Jesu Christe. Section 3, Qui tollis peccata mundi is a more reflective section, and Kodály leaves this section to soloists to express the deep feelings in the text. In Section 4, Quoniam tu solus sanctus, the chorus returns with martial fervor, in dialogue with the organ, all coming together at the Tu solus Altissimus. Section 5 concludes with a vigorous Cum Sancto Spiritu, ending with a cascading Amen.
Credo. This movement also is divided into five sections. Section 1 expresses a variety of moods. The tenor soloist intones the Gregorian chant Credo in unum Deum, and this time the phrase is continued in unison sections by altos/basses and sopranos/altos. Kodály changes this parallel structure in the next phrase. Sopranos/altos sing the phrase Deum de Deo, lumen de lumine (God of God, light of light) in a high register. All voices enter together at the same time, gradually slowing down as they lead to the next section. In Section 2, Et incarnatus est and Crucifixus, Kodály changes the key into a more somber tonality, with a much slower tempo and softer dynamic expressing the gravity of the text. Section 3 expresses joy at the Et resurrexit, as sopranos and tenors begin in unison, soon joined by the altos in a Baroque-style, melodistic phrase. Tenors join in, and the upper three voices sing happily up and down at sedet ad dexteram Patris, while the basses anchor the passage with steady notes. In Section 4, basses begin the joyous phrase, Et in Spiritum Sanctum, followed by the altos and sopranos at Qui ex Patre. All voices join together in intense unison at Qui cum Patre, et Filio, with the basses finishing the passage solo as they began it. Section 5, Et unam sanctam, begins with sopranos and altos in unison, as tenors and basses join them at catholicam. All voices join in unison at Confiteor. The basses playfully begin the last phrase of the movement. It’s tossed to the altos, while the sopranos sing a slower version of some of the notes, and the tenors make a short comment. All come together in a fervent Amen.

Sanctus. This movement is in three sections and demonstrates Kodály’s quiet, reflective abilities. Section 1 begins with a pensive organ introduction, followed by altos and sopranos singing Sanctus in gentle arcs. They are joined by the tenors, and the basses complete the phrase in a descending passage. In Section 2, the chorus sings Pleni sunt caeli with quiet restraint, as altos enter, followed by sopranos and tenors, with basses entering last, joined by altos singing gloria tua at the same time. Section 3 is a fanfare of Hosannas ending the movement.

Benedictus. The Benedictus continues the quiet lyricism of the previous movement, beginning with the altos singing melodic four-note phrase, supported by the tenors and basses in a wave-like phrase. The sopranos pick up the melody, again supported by the tenors and basses. Altos join that support, while sopranos continue with the melody. Sopranos and altos sing in unison, supported by the tenors and basses. Kodály brings chromaticism to the last section of the Benedictus, first in the organ and then in each voice as it enters—tenor, alto, soprano, bass. All lead to a triumphant series of Hosannas to conclude the movement.

Agnus Dei. The Agnus Dei completes the arch shape of the Mass, as it revisits some of the melodies used earlier in the composition. The basses begin the movement with the phrase Agnus Dei, followed by the alto soloist who sings Qui tollis peccata mundi using the same melody as the alto solo in the Qui tollis section of the Gloria. Each voice sings that phrase sooner or later, sometimes softly, sometimes firmly, leading to a jubilant Dona nobis pacem. Kodály repeats the phrases/words dona nobis, dona nobis pacem, and of all things visible and invisible. Kyrie, Et incarnatus est, and Crucifixus, Kodály changes the key into a more somber tonality, with a much slower tempo and softer dynamic expressing the gravity of the text. Section 3 expresses joy at the Et resurrexit, as sopranos and tenors begin in unison, soon joined by the altos in a Baroque-style, melodistic phrase. Tenors join in, and the upper three voices sing happily up and down at sedet ad dexteram Patris, while the basses anchor the passage with steady notes. In Section 4, basses begin the joyous phrase, Et in Spiritum Sanctum, followed by the altos and sopranos at Qui ex Patre. All voices join together in intense unison at Qui cum Patre, et Filio, with the basses finishing the passage solo as they began it. Section 5, Et unam sanctam, begins with sopranos and altos in unison, as tenors and basses join them at catholicam. All voices join in unison at Confiteor. The basses playfully begin the last phrase of the movement. It’s tossed to the altos, while the sopranos sing a slower version of some of the notes, and the tenors make a short comment. All come together in a fervent Amen.

Sanctus. This movement is in three sections and demonstrates Kodály’s quiet, reflective abilities. Section 1 begins with a pensive organ introduction, followed by altos and sopranos singing Sanctus in gentle arcs. They are joined by the tenors, and the basses complete the phrase in a descending passage. In Section 2, the chorus sings Pleni sunt caeli with quiet restraint, as altos enter, followed by sopranos and tenors, with basses entering last, joined by altos singing gloria tua at the same time. Section 3 is a fanfare of Hosannas ending the movement.

Benedictus. The Benedictus continues the quiet lyricism of the previous movement, beginning with the altos singing melodic four-note phrase, supported by the tenors and basses in a wave-like phrase. The sopranos pick up the melody, again supported by the tenors and basses. Altos join that support, while sopranos continue with the melody. Sopranos and altos sing in unison, supported by the tenors and basses. Kodály brings chromaticism to the last section of the Benedictus, first in the organ and then in each voice as it enters—tenor, alto, soprano, bass. All lead to a triumphant series of Hosannas to conclude the movement. Agnus Dei. The Agnus Dei completes the arch shape of the Mass, as it revisits some of the melodies used earlier in the composition. The basses begin the movement with the phrase Agnus Dei, followed by the alto soloist who sings Qui tollis peccata mundi using the same melody as the alto solo in the Qui tollis section of the Gloria. Each voice sings that phrase sooner or later, sometimes softly, sometimes firmly, leading to a jubilant Dona nobis pacem. Kodály repeats the phrases/words dona nobis, dona nobis pacem, pacem. He uses the Kyrie and Christe pattern from the first movement to set the Dona nobis pacem text, concluding the regular part of the Mass.

Credo. Credo in unum Deum, Patrem omnipotentem, Factorem coeli et terrae, Visibilium omni, et invisibilibum. Ite, Missa Est. Kodály ads a final section to this Mass, one not usually part of the regular Mass. He created an organ version for the original mass, and added the words for the choral setting. This text was a regular part of medieval and early Renaissance Mass settings, but is rarely used today. Go forth with the message, Thanks be to God. Most of all, grant us peace! Lewis Whitehart comments, “The final text Deo gratias, da pacem becomes a universal benediction, a fervent hope for all humanity.”
And I believe in one Lord, Jesus Christ,
The only begotten Son of God,
Born of the Father before all ages.
God from God, Light from Light,
True God from true God.
Begotten, not made,
Of one substance with the Father
By whom all things were made.
Who for us and for our salvation
came down from heaven.
And was incarnate by the Holy Spirit of the Virgin Mary.
And was made man.
Crucified also for us under Pontius
Pilate,
he suffered, and was buried.
And on the third day he rose again,
according to the Scriptures.
He ascended into heaven and he sits at the right hand of the Father.
He shall come again with glory to judge the living and the dead;
and of his kingdom there will be no end.
And I believe in the Holy Spirit,
the Lord and Giver of life,
who proceeds from the Father and the Son who together with the Father and the Son is adored and glorified,
who spoke to us through the Prophets.
And I believe in one, holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church.
I confess one baptism
For the remission of sins.
I await the resurrection of the dead,
and the life of the world to come.
Amen.

in nomine Domini.
Hosanna in excelsis.

In addition to teaching voice and performing, Mr. Wade works as a choral fellow with the Young Women’s Choral Projects of San Francisco. Mr. Wade dedicates his time to musicology and language learning, as he believes that it is essential to be studied in both disciplines in order to present a thoughtful and accurate program. Mr. Wade was the San Francisco Lyric Chorus Baritone soloist in our Fall 2016 program, Brush Up Your Shakespeare!
Donating to SF Lyric Chorus

The San Francisco Lyric Chorus is chartered by the State of California as a non-profit corporation and approved by the U.S. Internal Revenue Service as a 501(c)3 organization. Donations are tax-deductible as charitable contributions.

The San Francisco Lyric Chorus is a completely self-supporting independent organization, with a budget of about $54,000 per year. Chorus members pay dues of $120 for each four-month concert season, providing about a quarter of our income. Ticket sales account for another quarter. But half of our income comes from donations made by chorus members and by friends and supporters like those of you attending this concert.

Monetary gifts of any amount are therefore most welcome. All contributors will be acknowledged in our concert programs. For further information, e-mail info@sflc.org or call (415) 721-4077. Donations also may be mailed to the following address: Treasurer, San Francisco Lyric Chorus, 1650 Spruce St., Berkeley, CA 94709.

Adopt-A-Singer and Designated Fund programs

For as little as $30, you can support the San Francisco Lyric Chorus by “adopting” your favorite singer. For $100, you can sponsor an entire section (soprano, alto, tenor, or bass!) For $150, you can adopt our very special Music Director, Robert Gurney. You are also welcome to designate your contribution to one of our special funds, and be acknowledged in the concert program.

What a wonderful Spring semester it has been! Thank you, Lyric Choristers, for your hard work and dedication in preparing this beautiful and meaningful program. Because of your efforts, we can share the joy of Dvorák’s lesser known works, as well as the profundity of Kodály’s Missa Brevis, created during an event about which I’m sure most of us knew nothing.

Thank you, Robert, for your wonderful leadership, patient guidance, sense of humor, and sensitive teaching and conducting skills. You inspire and challenge us to be the very best we can, so that our community of singers can share the beauty of choral music with all who hear us.

Thank you, Bill for everything. You are bedrock, a foundation that helps the SFLC be the very best it can be. Thank you for all that you do for the chorus. You make an incredible difference!

We couldn’t do what we do without the wonderful support, ideas, and work of our fabulous Board of Directors. We are so grateful to have such a dedicated group of volunteers, willing to share their time, knowledge, and expertise so that we can bring wonderful choral music programs to our audiences.

Thank you also to our dedicated Section Representatives. They are our eyes and ears, working with their sections and our Music Director to create beautiful music.

Thank you to our wonderful donors and contributors and our marvelous audiences, who make our concerts possible. We appreciate your confidence in us and in our music, and we look forward to sharing exciting music with you in the future.

Thank you to our valiant volunteers, who generously give of their time to help with our chorus tasks. All the work that you do makes a difference.

Thank you all for making the San Francisco Lyric Chorus the very special organization that it is.
